BACKGROUND

David grew up in the Skagit Valley and graduated from Anacortes High School. He earned an athletic scholarship to Seattle University where he graduated in 1988 with a degree in Business Management; followed by a law degree in 1992 from Creighton University.

David has a wealth of legal experience. He has been an attorney for over 20 years; and has practiced law in the Skagit Valley since 1995. He has worked as both a prosecuting attorney and a public defender. Additionally, he clerked for the Department of Justice in the early 1990s.

David was a commissioned officer in the United States Army Judge Advocate General Corps, where he served in a reserve capacity for nearly a decade. David is a member of the Washington State Bar Association, the Association of Trial Lawyers of America, and the Skagit Bar Association. David lives in Burlington with his wife Rebecca and their three children.

PHILOSOPHY

"You don't need to be abrasive to be persuasive" (Crucial Conversations, Patterson et al, 2011).

This quote rings true especially in the legal profession. You don't need to pick an abrasive attorney to get the best results. In court judges make decisions based on facts; not on how loud or adamant an attorney is. This certainly doesn't mean that David won't aggressively handle your case, it just means that being abrasive isn't necessary to win, or negotiate, a case.

David's philosophy is to protect the emotional and financial interests of every client. Litigating cases is sometimes necessary; however, being able to resolve a case outside of the courtroom is, more often than not, beneficial in terms of both financial and emotional impacts. David has the experience and the skills necessary to resolve your case outside of a courtroom if at all possible.

Outside of work David believes in giving back to the community. David volunteers at Community Action, he is a member of the American Legion, and he is a member of the Burlington-Edison School Board.
